

It's only bad once a week maybe and It's just a unusual fear to me, I don't know If I'm ready to go to the conclusion that it's something that requires a doctors visit.

I have another irrational fear.

This is the most hilarious fear

My friend John has a very specific very irrational fear

My fear is that my tricks won't work fear of the sheet being pulled off of the mattress.

Can't even remember when or how the fear began.

I don't remember having any real fears as a child but at some point I became so terrified of the water that I don't go in water past my waist.

It might not be so much a fear as a strong aversion.

See now all my fears are confirmed

I have no idea where this fear came from.

My mind completes the fear by telling me how squishy and meaty this is going to feel.

I used to work with a guy who had a hefty fear/dislike of cotton balls.

My fear its being afraid.

It's not a paralyzing fear, but mirrors.

I have a fear of having the spring in an office chair becoming so pressurized that it explodes upwards, impaling my anal cavity

It's not really a fear it just makes my skin crawl.

Any loud sudden noise paralyzes me with fear now.

My biggest fear is doing something to someone, and never having the chance to take it back.
