

There is one person who is 7x more likely to kill you compared to everyone else. Yourself.

There is nothing anyone can do about it.

There is one specific thought that causes deadly brain aneurysms, but since all the victims are dead we don't know what it is.

There is a good chance at least a few people who read this won't live until the weekend.

There is at least one scientist out there whose life mission is to investigate cubic poop and the buttoles from whence they came.

There is a whale called 52 Blue that only sings at their frequency meaning it can't communicate with other whales. It is nicknamed the loneliest whale on the planet.

There is nothing anyone can do about it.

There is no cure for Tinnitus.

There is over a trillion dollars in student loan debt currently outstanding in the United States.

There is a person whose entire exposure to starwars consists of the holiday special and nothing else.

There is a large outdoor lab in which human corpses are left inside cars, rolled in carpets or stuffed in trash bags for weeks at a time during different weather conditions, so that forensic scientists can make informed estimations of when someone died based upon the extent of decomposition.

There is a substantial number of people who can't stop reading this, even though they could be doing many productive things.

There is nothing we can do about it other than shame North Korea's leaders.

There is a disease adorably named "floppy baby syndrome".

There is an idea that the male's head being eaten actually benefited copulation, in that the abdominal ganglion was in control of the male's movements during sperm delivery and that removal of the head increased these movements.

There is no space in between.

There's a 2 in 5 chance of you getting cancer.

There's nothing but darkness there.

There's a Frank Turner song where the narrator, at age four- receives the dying communique from the Challenger crew. It's called Silent Key.

There's not a lot of terminal old age diseases that seem preferable to dying quickly in a plane crash.

There's a school of thought where time doesn't exist for a photon.

There's a colony of mites at the roots of your eyelashes.

There's a 40% chance you live next to a pedophile.

There's little anybody can do about it since they are usually in positions of power and the people who try to make a real difference end up in a ditch somewhere.

There's probably at least one man, somewhere in the world, getting castrated right now.

There's feces everywhere.

There's a spider genus named "Brian" that can run across water, dive into and catch and devourer their prey. Can also carry things three times their size!.

There's a 100% chance you will die.

There's a condition called third degree heart block.

There's another disease like that.

There's a scene where the lemmings jump off a cliff into the Arctic Ocean.

There's also a scene where a baby polar bear falls down a cliff, which was actually filmed in a studio.

.